A novel or a play or an essay can have mystery at its core, and can be all the better for it—but such mystery is incidental to it being in whatever particular genre it happens to be in. Philosopher George Steiner noted in Language and Silence: Essays 1958-1967 that "When the word of the poet ceases, a great light begins," explaining that "Language can only deal [with]... a special, restricted segment of reality. The rest, and it is presumably the much larger part, is silence."
